Breaking Ceremony
Eisenhower College*

SEPTEMBER 21, 1965

"This ground-breaking ceremony represents a long step toward the realization of a dream by men of action—a dream which the members of the Colleges Founding Committee, its Trustees and many friends of higher education believed could come true; that a new center of learning might exist for the youth of our land. And, since the expanding future of our nation must depend upon our young people, on their intellectual and moral greatness, I am proud to be a part of this dream now coming into realization."

JOHN C. ROSENKRANS

DR. EARL J. MC GRATH

"Make no little plans;
they have no magic to stir men's blood . . .
make big plans;
aim high in hope and work."

DAVID H. BURNHAM

These were the words with which Earl J. McGrath, first Chancellor of Eisenhower College, summed up the concept of this new institute of higher education in launching the charter fund-raising campaign two years ago in Seneca Falls, New York.

The man with the "big plans" was a young local physician, Dr. Scott W. Skinner; his idea: a new liberal arts college in Seneca Falls. Nameless, without a program, buildings, campus, faculty or financing, the dream still had the "magic to stir men's blood."

Today, four years later, that new liberal arts college, which now bears the name of one of the nation's great soldiers and statesmen, is well on its way to becoming a reality.

The question naturally arises: How does one start a new and independent college? The small but dedicated band of men who joined with Dr. Skinner in his scholastic crusade are sure of one thing: "Big plans" require "big work."

First, it is not a one man job; one needs a team. Dr. Skinner found no lack of volunteers: John C. Rosenkrans, insurance man, now Acting Chairman of the college's Board of Trustees; Nelson B. Delavan, industrialist; Dr. Charles E. Hall, veterinarian; Paul C. Jenks, M.D.; and Philip J. Olmstead, engineering executive, were among the first and most enthusiastic.

But even with that kind of support, there must be a program to make the "big plan" work. Suddenly, these men, whose experience with higher education had been confined to the student's side of the professional desk, found themselves confronted with a myriad of academic mysteries. Feasibility studies, college budgets, charter applications, academic programs, faculty standards, entrance requirements, were but a few of the problems.

Undaunted, they turned with confident expectancy to state and national academic leaders for advice; their candor and dedication won over one of the nation's foremost educators, Dr. McGrath, executive officer of the Institute of Higher Education at Teachers College, Columbia University, as educational consultant and ultimately as first Chancellor of the college.

From the start, their most ambitious and heartfelt objective had been to obtain permission from General Dwight D. Eisenhower to name the college in his honor. Indeed, the first action taken by the group before it was even formally organized in December, 1961, was to request such permission from the General.

The former President of the United States was understandably cautious, withholding final judgment on the request to await further developments.

The year, 1962, was a busy one for the founders. They had noted that there was no Presbyterian affiliated college in New York State. Since most of them were affiliated with that church, they decided now that it was time to correct this lack. There were conferences with Presbyterian officials; the local Presbytery endorsed the project; the First Presbyterian Church of Seneca Falls pledged $100,000. A feasibility study was completed, indicating a real need for the college.

General Eisenhower watched closely these determined efforts and the results. He was impressed. In April, 1963, he granted permission to have the college bear his name. Two months later, the Synod of New York of United Presbyterian Church approved the project for a church-related college in New York State.

Now the "big plan" was in full swing. Dr. McGrath was working on the academic program, which would make Eisenhower College "An Adventure in College Education." A firm of architects was engaged to draw up preliminary plans for the college. Offices were set up over a store in the center of town. Dr. W. Robert Bokelman, Vice President for Planning & Development was retained. In June, 1964, the local charter campaign for $1,000,000 was launched at a dinner in the Seneca Falls Country Club.

January, 1965, was an important month for the college founders. On January 28th, the Board of Regents of the University of the State of New York granted Eisenhower College a provisional charter, the first issued for a new independent college in more than a quarter of a century. That night, the charter trustees were announced. The following day, the college acquired a 265-acre campus site with payment in full.

In the charter application to the Board of Regents, Dr. McGrath had lived up to his promise that this would be "an adventure in college education." Worked into the program for Eisenhower College were the results of his years of study of liberal arts colleges throughout the country; incorporated into its curriculum were the best features he had discovered during his far-reaching surveys.

Eisenhower College now will emerge as a coeducational institution, operating twelve months of the year on a trimester plan, with a curriculum broad enough to assure its graduates entrance into any graduate or professional school, yet sufficiently compact to guarantee maximum faculty guidance of the highest quality in every classroom.

Its proclaimed program of "excellence" will be directed to intellectual stimulation, social appreciation, moral development and spiritual insight. Particular emphasis will be placed on "international outlook" by providing its students with a better understanding of other nations, their cultures, and their histories—so important in this world of constantly shrinking distances and ever expanding trade, travel and social interchanges.

Its student lists will be open to those who respect learning and know the force of ideas in shaping and directing the human enterprise, without regard to race, color or creed.

Eisenhower College will seek to attract high school graduates of competence, promise and seriousness of purpose, but it will not limit admission only to those in the upper ten percent of their classes. Indeed, it will dip more deeply into the so-called ability groupings than only the upper ten percent—perhaps into the upper third and in some instances even more broadly.

That the program has struck the imagination of the academic world is evidenced by the more than 300 applications for faculty positions that have already been received from the professional ranks of other colleges.

Just five weeks ago, the giant thermometer, standing prominently in the middle of Seneca Falls, pushed over the $1,000,000 mark. The people of this area of central New York State had proved their faith in Eisenhower College and the whole-heartedness with which they welcomed it.

The ground breaking ceremonies today mark an historic moment in the development of Eisenhower College. The first class will enroll in September, 1967—just two years from now.

There are still other hurdles to be cleared; much work remains to be done; broader financial support must be obtained.

But the men who have carried the campaign this far successfully are equal to the challenge.

They are imbued with "the magic that stirs men's blood."
